MOOD: 🤢 ick.

MUSIC: Talking in the hall. Hospitals are noisy.

But tonight it's Brother Alton on the King of Spices! All about the vanilla on Good Eats. So yay!

I hear there's a bit of a fuss down in Neurology. Well, I'm sure it'll get worked out by the end of the day.

Now that makes me wish I had cable, to watch Food Network. (No, it's not worth $60+/month for the first six months, and ghods-know-how-much/month after that; but still. Alton. And vanilla. OMG.)

It's got crème brûlée.

Hey, I could eat that. But hospital kitchens don't make crème brûlée.

Well obviously you just need someone to bring some crème brûlée to you.

(BTW, Hi! I found you via  matociquala. Odd time I know, but it's good to hear it sounds you're healing well.)

Did you ever see the second Transporter movie? I could see you in the hospital kitchen showing them how to cook, like the French detective did in the police crime lab. grin

But hospital kitchens don't make crème brûlée.

What, you'd really want /hospital 'food'/ version of crème brûlée?

fly-by lurker delurks temporarily. and then flies by.

Hospital version would probably have gelatin in it. I just bet. Eeeuw.

I have discovered a surprisingly large amount of Good Eats on YouTube, though I'm not sure how soon things get posted after they air. Don't go poking at it unless you have a day or two to kill, though. "You can't watch just one." :-)

(This was how I saw the one where he makes bacon -- "Scrap Iron Chef". And the one about fish and chips made me really want to drop out of school and start my own chippy.)

During my (thankfully infrequent) stays in hospital-land, I've been astounded at the unconnectedness of it all. Particularly the food-part and the rest-part.

It's like you're interred in a bad hotel, while good doctors and nurses try and make you work right.

Something about an unauthorized biopsy.

Well, what he actually said was, "Cracked the skull and went to town without so much as a by-your-leave."

I'd come help, hon, but downtown streets are clogged with shambling lobbyists. They had to close the freeway ramps because the knocking-down-and-squishing was more than DPW could clean up after. I can't get out of here until the snowplows are done.

Someone up at Pitt has worked up some sort of repellent. Still experimental, but if I somehow find myself by a post office, I'll try to send it to you.

It'd make Harpy's job easier, anyway.

I don't understand that, about the media. This should be a field day for them.

I'm surprised that DC even has snowplows this time of year. I was down there on a business trip oh, about ten years ago or so, in February, right after a big (3 feet plus) blizzard. We didn't see a snowplow for five days. The locals told us that the District itself only had a few, while the private contractors refused to work in the District because they never got paid.

OTOH, I suppose if there's any time of year that DC would have plows available, it'd be mid-June.
